

Saturday, December 3, 2011

By Ben Chew

LSU defensive tackle Michael Brockers needed a dog sitter for the SEC title game

As LSU and Georgia are set to do battle in the SEC championship game later today, LSU defensive tackle Michael Brockers was in a little bit of a pickle earlier this week.

Since LSU had to travel to Atlanta for the game, Brockers needed someone to watch over his dog, Tyson. So, Brockers went on the Internet and placed the below listing on the website Sitter City looking for a dog sitter at about $10-20 per day:

“My dog tyson needs a sitter while I go play in the SEC championship this weekend because I play football for LSU”

Hopefully, Michael was able to find a sitter on short notice but if he couldn't, Tyson probably could have come with him and chilled on the sidelines with Uga.